

New Realities of Proper Information Destruction

There are few areas of information security coming under more regulatory enforcement and media attention than information destruction. At the same time, within any organization, data is being produced, transmitted, and stored in more ways and from more sources than ever before. In this session, Mr. Johnson will describe how new laws, increasing regulatory enforcement, and media attention have changed the way security professionals need to think about and influence the way organizational information deal with the information they inevitably discard.